Cyclists heading north towards Umstead State Park will want to use the Black Creek trailhead located on NW Maynard Road, across from Godbold Park. Sunday Drive, with its steep bike lanes and residential nature, makes a good north/south alternative to Harrison Avenue to access the West Ridge Trail and East Ridge Loop to the north.	Lochmere Loop (6.5 miles): This southeast Cary loop encircles two lakes and provides greenway access through Ritter Park. Caution should be used when traveling along high volume thoroughfares in the north. These include Tryon Road, Southeast Cary Parkway and a crossing over Kildaire Farm Road.	Tarbert Loop (2.6 miles): Located on the western edge of the Three Lakes Loop, this shorter route traverses rolling hills along wide, residential streets. This route provides access to Annie L. Jones Park and three greenway interconnectors. Two greenways are located adjacent to Tarbert Loop, with the third greenway accessible by sidewalk at the intersection of Lake Pine Drive and Southwest Cary Parkway. Caution should be exercised when crossing SW Cary Parkway.	West Ridge Trail (2.1 miles): The West Ridge Trail is a spur off the East Ridge Loop and provides access to the Black Creek Trail via connection points along Dynasty Drive. The trail continues north along Dynasty Drive, a residential road striped with bike lanes. A short section on Cary Parkway leads to Thorpe Boulevard and access to East Ridge Trail (1.6 miles). This short northeast Cary loop is located at the eastern end of the West Ridge Trail. Wyatt's Pond Lane and Reedy Creek Road take riders past Reedy Creek Middle School. East Dynasty Drive forms the southern boundary of the loop.	East Ridge Trail (1.6 miles): This short northeast Cary loop is located at the eastern end of the West Ridge Trail. Wyatt's Pond Lane and Reedy Creek Road take riders past Reedy Creek Middle School. East Dynasty Drive forms the southern boundary of the loop.	Park Central Loop (5.5 miles): Characterized by wide streets and gently rolling terrain, this central Cary route traverses through some of the town's oldest neighborhoods. The Elyn Drive spur accesses both the Hinshaw and Pirate's Cove Greenways. Both greenways are located off of Greenwood Circle. Use caution along Wenn Drive and Bargate - watch for backing cars from apartment parking areas.	Three Lakes Loop (6.2 miles): This aptly named loop route is both challenging and serene. Catch glimpses of MacGregor Downs and Kildaire Farms Lakes and the Apex Reservoir as you ride from Godbold Park. Sunday Drive, with its steep bike lanes and residential nature, makes a good north/south alternative to Harrison Avenue to access the West Ridge Trail and East Ridge Loop to the north.	MacGregor Loop (2.8 miles): This short loop can be combined with the Three Lakes Loop for a quiet and pleasant ride through one of Cary's best-known neighborhoods. There are a few short, steep hills and several golf cart crossings.	NC Bike Route 1 (8.5 miles): Along Davis Drive. This route is part of the Carolina Connection, which NCDOT has designated as a portion of US Bike Route 1, which runs from Maine to Florida.	NC Bike Route 2 (11.2 miles): Along High House Road from Davis Drive. This is part of the Mountains-to-the-Sea Route, which extends 700 miles from Murphy to Monticello, NC. Extending into rural western Wake and eastern Chatham County, this route is a favorite of Triangle club cyclists for recreational rides to Green Level and Jordan Lake.	Cary Bike Route #3 (7.8 miles): This signed route runs along southwest and northwest Cary Parkway and serves as a connection between numerous bicycle loops. Portions of the route have 14' wide outside lanes, while other segments are narrow with little or no shoulder. This route is recommended for experienced cyclists only.	Cary Bike Route #7 (3.0 miles): Serving the northern half of Cary, this signed route runs along Harrison Avenue in the north forming the eastern edge of the West Ridge and Northwoods Loops. Located on a major thoroughfare, this route is recommended for experienced cyclists only.
